

The EQ-WOOD project continues despite the effects of COVID-19 emergency.

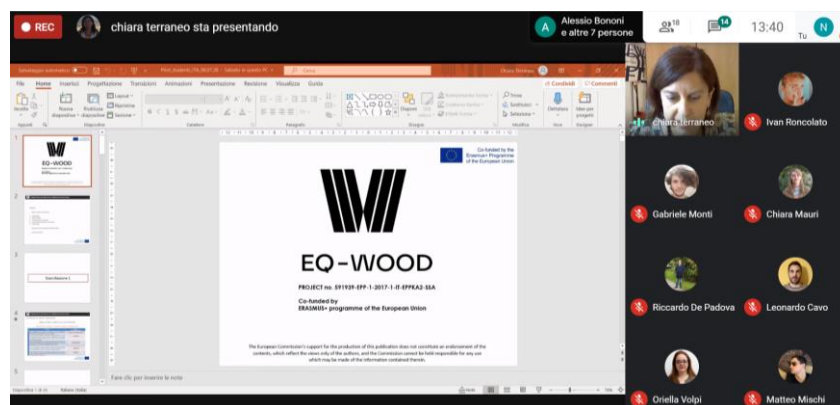

The lockdown, that affected all participating countries, has slowed down the ongoing activities and the organization of the pilot training for testing the developed training content with students and workers.

The closure of schools and firms didn't allow that these were organised "face-to-face".

However, the EQ-WOOD project was not set on hold, as we, continued remote activities and tried to keep the the project goal sas foreseen.

The first pilot training of the new course for the Innovation Advisor was organized in Milan with students of the "Rosario Messina" Wood Furniture Training Institute in Lentate sul Seveso (MB).

Some 20 students participated in the lessons by streaming. These concerned Project Management (one of the 5 Units developed) and the platform with the online course was also tested.

The pilot training ended with the collection of feedback on the content, the structure and usability of the lessons and the platform, with the aim of further improving the final product of the project.

The course is aimed at both students and managers or workers from companies in the furniture sector and will be available both in its entirety (to obtain the "Full Qualification") and in a modular form to explore the topics of greatest interest.
